CITY OF FELTON

Felton is a distinctive mountain town located in the San Lorenzo Valley, just 7 miles north of Santa Cruz and within easy reach of the greater Bay Area. Known for its rich history, small-town charm, and access to the majestic redwood forests, Felton offers a unique blend of community character and natural beauty.

The town serves as a gateway to Henry Cowell Redwoods State Park, one of the most visited parks in the region, attracting hundreds of thousands of visitors annually. Outdoor enthusiasts frequent the area for hiking, camping, and exploring the world-famous Roaring Camp Railroads. This steady tourism, combined with a loyal local population, provides consistent demand for neighborhood-oriented retail, dining, and service businesses.

Felton's commercial corridor along Highway 9 benefits from year-round traffic connecting Santa Cruz to the rest of the San Lorenzo Valley, including Ben Lomond, Boulder Creek, and the broader Santa Cruz Mountains. The community has a strong identity, supported by local businesses, restaurants, music venues, and cultural destinations that create a vibrant small-town environment with regional appeal.

With its combination of natural amenities, stable local economy, and strategic location, Felton continues to attract both residents and visitors seeking an authentic Central Coast mountain lifestyle.
